HELPFUL HINTS GETTING TO NEW YORK CITY

- Do your research. If you are driving into the city know the location of where you want to park. It makes a difference if you are heading to the east side or west side which highway you take into the city. Take the Hudson Parkway for the west side or FDR Drive for the East side. This will save you time fighting traffic to get across the city.
- Route 95 through Connecticut will often be congested, as an alternative route try the Merritt Parkway. It takes you north of 95 onto a two lane highway but it can be smoother travel through CT.
- You can travel by train getting on the Amtrak at Providence or South Kingston stations. Tickets for the train are not cheap but not driving into the city can be worth the price.
- Another option is to drive into Connecticut, park at the New Haven Station and get on the Metro North Commuter Train. It is a little longer but much less expensive.
- Taking a flight from Rhode Island to NYC usually isn't worth it. It will cost the same as a train ticket and you land in LaGuardia Airport. From LaGuardia you are still 30-minutes outside the city.
- Bus travel is a very good option. It's not as fast as the train but it drops you at the Port Authority in Times Square.

GETTING AROUND NEW YORK CITY

- Uber or Lyft are great choices if you already have the app and are comfortable with the business. By using these car services, you won't have to worry about taking out your wallet for tipping or fairs, but look out for surge pricing.
- Cabs in New York are a common sight and will take cash or credit. They can be hailed from the street and will get you where you need to go.
- The Subway is another option and is used by millions of people per year. The key to using the New York City Subway System is reading your map. Buy your Metro card at the kiosk inside nearly all subway stations.
- The OMNY is the contactless fare payment system for public transportation in the New York region. Simply use your contactless credit or debit card, smart phone, wearable device, or an OMNY card to tap and go. OMNY will eventually combine fare payments and ticketing across subways, buses, paratransit, and commuter rail. And yes, the MetroCard will eventually be phased out. So, let's get you tapping!
